All students will benefit from BYU's new Indoor Practice Facility and Student-Athlete Center, said President Merrill J. Bateman.

"They [students] need to see this will benefit them as well," President Bateman said during a groundbreaking ceremony Monday.

An e-mail sent to the president's office after the announcement during the Syracuse game, stated it was hard for the students to get excited about a new athletic facility.

The physical education department as well as intramural and extramural sports would use the new facilities, he said.

President Bateman said there are three reasons the university was willing to pour $50 million into intercollegiate athletics instead of academics.

The first reason was the importance for BYU to gain recognition.

Second, athletics give BYU an opportunity to showcase LDS principles and standards to the world.

Third, people who are not members of the Church follow BYU sports.

"We honestly believe we can recruit enough young people who can showcase our standards," President Bateman said.

Elder Henry B. Eyring said these new buildings are not what is most important.

"The building won't bring victories," he said. "Heart brings victories."

The other speakers' sentiments were gratitude toward everyone who made this event possible, especially President Bateman and the President's Leadership Council.

After the program inside the Smith Fieldhouse, the festivities moved out to Haws field for the official groundbreaking ceremony.

Elder Eyring, President Bateman, head football coach Gary Crowton and members of the President's Leadership Council participated in the groundbreaking ceremony.

During the ceremony, members of the football team pushed a tackling sled that pulled a plow manned by Elder Eyring, President Bateman and Crowton.

"The Student-Athlete Center will be the hub of activity for all student athletes," said Elaine Michaelis, director of Women's Athletics.

The new facilities will house a student-athlete academic center, a strength and conditioning center, a nutrition center, training facilities, a Hall of Fame, an equipment room, locker rooms, conference rooms and offices.

Construction is set to begin immediately. The project should be finished by fall 2003.

Saudi leaders push Iraq to cooperate

Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — Saudi Arabia has turned up the pressure on Baghdad, hinting that it might offer its desert installations as a jump-off base for any U.S. military campaign against Iraq _ as long as such an attack had U.N. sanction.

But the Saudi foreign minister, Prince Saud al-Faisal, also said the rest of the world clearly wants the Iraq crisis resolved without "the firing of a single shot."

Saud's statement was issued Sunday in New York as the U.N. General Assembly wrapped up the fourth day of its opening general debate, a day on which other Arab leaders also addressed the explosive impasse over Iraq.

Syria's foreign minister said "blind bias" was focusing global attention on Iraq rather than Israel. Jordan urged Iraq to comply with U.N. resolutions and avert "dire consequences" for its people.

Iraq consents to weapon inspectors

Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — Iraq agreed Monday to allow the unconditional return of U.N. weapons inspectors, a reversal coming days after President Bush warned Baghdad to comply with U.N. resolutions or face military action. The White House dismissed the offer as a tactical move.

"This is not a matter of inspections. It is about disarmament of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction and the Iraqi regime's compliance with all other Security Council resolutions," White House spokesman Scott McClellan said in the statement. The statement called it "a tactical step by Iraq in hopes of avoiding strong U.N. Security Council action."

The statement demanded a "new, effective U.N. Security Council resolution that will actually deal with the threat Saddam Hussein poses to the Iraqi people, to the region and to the world."

Four years after U.N. weapons inspectors left Baghdad, Iraq said in a letter addressed Monday to U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan, that its decision to allow them to return

Harding pleads innocent to third-degree felony charges

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Fourth District Judge Raymond Harding Jr. pleaded innocent Monday to two third-degree felony counts of drug possession.

Harding stood quietly as his attorney Ed Brass entered pleas.

The judge was arrested July 13 after his family called the police. They gave police a bag containing what appeared to be cocaine.

Harding is accused of using or possessing heroin and cocaine in his home, according to charging documents. Third-degree felony convictions carry a maximum of five years in prison and $5,000 in fines.

He is out of jail on $10,000 bail. Harding has been suspended from his judicial duties. He's on paid leave because state law says a judge can't be suspended without pay.

As Brass and Harding left the courtroom, Brass told reporters that this case is not being handled like other first time drug possession charges.

"It's an unusual case. You've been reporting that this is a usual case, this is an unusual case," Brass said.

Paul Murphy, a spokesman for the Utah Attorney General's office, said the state will prosecute the case fairly.

"We're trying to handle it like any other case. The difference is a lot of people are very interested in what might happen," Murphy said.

The judge's drug charges have prompted two Provo attorneys to request a review of one of Harding's cases.

Attorneys Mike Esplin and Sheldon Carter say they're concerned that he may have used illegal substances before court proceedings, thereby depriving courtroom defendants of a "fair adjudication."

They have filed motions for review for their clients Terry Stephenson and Grant Mills, who both face multiple felony counts of securities fraud.

Legal experts say it's an uphill battle to prove a judge may have been influenced by drug use on the bench.

State Rep. Scott Daniels, D-Salt Lake City, a former 3rd District judge and past president of the Utah State Bar Association, said that if someone sworn to uphold the law breaks the law it is "a very serious matter."

Daniels said the public's trust is violated only if a public figure is convicted, not just accused, of a crime.

Other 4th district justices have had to pick up heavier caseloads in Harding's absence, said Brent Johnson general council for the Administrative Office of the Courts.

"They've asked the judicial council to provide some assistance," Johnson said.

Third District Judge Timothy Hanson set a Nov. 6 preliminary hearing for Harding.

Embassies reopen after 9/11 anniversary

JAKARTA, Indonesia — U.S. embassies in Malaysia and Indonesia reopened Monday after closing because of terror warnings ahead of the anniversary of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, officials said.

The missions in the Cambodian capital Phnom Penh and the Vietnamese capital Hanoi remained closed until further notice, embassy officials said. The U.S. consulate in Vietnam's Ho Chi Minh City has reopened.

After briefly reopening last week, the embassy in Vietnam was shut again Friday while its "security posture" was further evaluated, the embassy said in a statement released Monday.

"In light of the anniversary of the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, we cannot rule out the possibility that attacks may occur against U.S. embassies or consulates," the statement said.

Island nations against global warming

UNITED NATIONS — Small island nations are urging immediate action to stop global warming, blaming it for a rise in water levels that threaten their existence.

If global warming continues, rising seas may suck away their shores, island representatives told the General Assembly on Sunday.

Other issues being debated at the U.N. session will have no meaning in the absence of serious actions to address global warming, said Tomasi Puapua, governor-general of Tuvalu, a small South Pacific nation that sits no more than 10 feet above sea level.

Speakers from island countries on opposite sides of the globe presented a united front on issues ranging from the failings of globalization to favoring membership for Taiwan in the United Nations.

Most focused on their fear of extinction, criticizing rich nations for producing the bulk of the carbon dioxide blamed for global warming and the rising ocean levels threatening them.

Brawl sparks debate in South Korea

SEOUL, South Korea — An investigation into a weekend brawl between U.S. soldiers and South Korean activists on a Seoul subway could take time because of sharply conflicting claims by both sides, South Korean police said Monday.

The activists allege that one of the soldiers, Pvt. John Murphy, started the brawl by punching former opposition legislator Suh Kyong-won, who was handing out fliers about two South Korean girls who died June 13 after being struck by a U.S. military vehicle.

Murphy and two other soldiers claim they were the ones assaulted when Murphy declined to accept the Korean-language flier, which he cannot read.

Since the fatal incident in June, activists have been demanding more South Korean jurisdiction over U.S. soldiers stationed in the country.

"The investigation is expected to take time as testimonies from the American soldiers and the South Korean activists are very conflicting," said a police officer at Seoul's Chongyangri station.

Palestinian killed at Gaza road crossing

JERUSALEM — Israeli soldiers shot and killed a Palestinian near an Israeli-controlled road crossing in the Gaza Strip on Monday, Palestinian police officials said.

In the West Bank town of Nablus, soldiers raided an apartment building in search of a wanted militant, Palestinians said. The incidents took place as Israeli Jews marked Yom Kippur, the holiest day in the Jewish calendar.

The shooting of the Palestinian took place at an intersection on the main north-south road through Gaza, near the Jewish settlement of Gush Katif. There were conflicting reports on how it took place, Palestinian officials said.

Israeli forces who handed over the man's body to Palestinian authorities said the man was shot by troops when he approached a military position near the crossing, the officials said.

The Israeli army said it would not comment until Yom Kippur was over Monday evening.

Scripture of the Day

"But love your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest: for he is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil.

"Be ye therefore merciful as your Father is also merciful."

— Luke 6:35-36

Hyunmin Oh, 18, a freshman majoring in business, likes this scripture because, "to love your enemies is the short sentence, but it the hardest thing to do, hoping no harm to them. But we need to remember that Heavenly Father will bless our lives.

Photocopy machines spread anthr

Associated Press

BOCA RATON, Fla. — FBI investigators believe photocopy machines were the reason anthrax spores were spread throughout an office building where a tainted letter was mailed in last year's attacks, according to a published report.

Federal investigators returned last month to the American Media Inc. building for 12 days, armed with new techniques for detecting large quantities of anthrax.

They found anthrax spores in all the copy machines in the three-story, 68,000 square foot building, an anonymous source familiar with the investigation told The Palm Beach Post for its Sunday editions.

Investigators believe the microscopic spores spread from the first-floor mail room where the letter was opened and onto reams of copy paper stored there, the source said.

The spores then spread into the air by fans inside the machines loaded with the copy paper.

The building housed more than two dozen copy machines. The FBI's theory helps explain for the first time the presence of anthrax throughout the building.

"Once it falls, it stays," Palm Beach County Health Department spokesman Tim O'Connor said. "It was stuck to the keyboard in Stevens' office. It stuck in the machinery that sorts the mail in post offices."

Security legislation tied up

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Nearly a year after the nation went to war against terrorism, Congress is still struggling to pass legislation to better protect and prepare the nation for the next terrorist assault.

As the anniversary of Sept. 11 passed, the Senate was making slow progress on a bill to create a new homeland security department, the agency President Bush wants to spearhead the anti-terror drive.

The House and Senate continue to squabble over legislation to shield insurance companies from astronomical claims from future terrorist attacks despite months of warnings from the administration and the industry that failure to act could cripple the economy.

Legislation to improve security at the nation's ports, thought to be highly vulnerable to terrorist attacks, is tied up in House-Senate negotiations, and the debate on arming airline pilots goes on. With the new budget year beginning Oct. 1, the House and Senate have yet to agree on a defense spending bill that significantly boosts the military budget.

The situation was very different a year ago, when Congress responded to the Sept. 11 attacks with a remarkable display of unity.

Within a week, Congress approved and the president signed a $40 billion anti-terror bill and a resolution authorizing the use of military force against those responsible for the attacks. Within weeks, a major bailout of the airline industry and a measure significantly increasing the powers of law enforcement agencies to fight terrorism were enacted.

Congress followed by approving legislation to improve airport security, with a new federal work force for airport screening; to tighten border security; and to better prepare the nation for bioterrorism threats.

But cross-party cooperation has broken down on other measures, often over issues unrelated to the terrorist threat.

The Republican-controlled House passed its homeland security department bill in July, but it is now stalled on the Senate floor, mainly over a worker rights issue.

id, there are various l reasons as to why t lower mental health of the nation.

rural state, and rural report poorer mental penter said. Also, trends and the functging attitudes toward could affect reports of mental health.

One explanation for the higher statistics, perhaps, is that Utahns are better educated about mental illness.

"People have been more educated here and they call to get help quicker than in other states," said Carol Cisco of the Utah Department of Human Services.

Another explanation for the higher statistics is the time frame when the data was collected.

Carpenter said, "The data was taken during 2000, a time when our computer industry was hit pretty hard, which caused high levels of unemployment."

The data for the report came from the Behavioral Risk Factor Surveillance System, which has been collecting self-reported health data since 1995. Utah has remained at the same level since the BRFSS started doing health studies. Utah also rated worst in the United States for physical health.

"All objective sources for health research show Utah to be at or above national averages for physical health," said Carpenter. "There is obviously something wrong with the data in the study. Maybe Utahns are just more critical of their health."

Another factor is that there is a difference between people reporting poor mental health and diagnosable mental illnesses.

"We shouldn't confuse reporting poor mental health with a higher level of diagnosable mental illness," Carpenter said. "Historically, Utah doesn't have a higher level of diagnosable mental illnesses compared to other states."

Daniel K. Judd, professor of ancient scripture and a mental health and religion specialist, said, "There is no difference in diagnosable mental illness between LDS and non-LDS populations."

Nationally, 33 percent of all Americans report having poor mental health during the last 30 days, yet only 22.1 percent of all Americans suffer from a diagnosable mental disorder, according to the U.S. Census Bureau.

This figure translates into 44.3 million, or one in five Americans suffering from mental illness.

Utah boasts lowest rates for various diseases

By Sean Schantzen
sean@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Utah has some of the lowest rates in the nation for various diseases and health issues, according to a recent study by the Henry J. Kaiser Family Foundation.

Utah has the lowest mortality rate in the nation, at 45 deaths per 100,000.

The heart disease rate in Utah is also the lowest in the nation, at 192 deaths per 100,000.

The state has the second lowest cancer rate in the nation and Utah's stroke rate is below the national average, according to the report.

Some of the factors responsible for such low rates for these diseases are lifestyle habits practiced by many Utahns, such as low alcohol consumption and low smoking rates, said Byron Murray, a professor in the biology department and a disease specialist.

Only 12.9 percent of Utah's population smokes, the lowest smoking rate in the nation, and the rate of alcohol consumption is also among the lowest in the country, according to the study.

"There are two things people need to do to lower their chances of getting cancer," said Kim O'Neill, a cancer specialist and professor of micro and molecular biology at BYU. "Stop smoking and eat a good diet of fruits and vegetables."

Byron said because a large percentage of Utah residents are members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and adhere to the church's dietary suggestions, this probably influences the lower cancer and heart disease rates.

"We probably eat more fruits and vegetables and less meat than people in other areas, which also lowers the rates," Byron said.

Even obesity rates in Utah are the lowest in the nation, according to the study. Forty-nine percent of Utahns are overweight or obese, while the national average is 55 percent.

Not all disease rates are low in Utah, though. Utah has the fifth highest diabetes rate.

Thirty-two of 100,000 Utahns die each year from diabetes, compared with a national average of 25 per 100,000.

The percentage of Utah's children who receive their childhood immunizations is also low, coming in 45th in the nation.

Only 68 percent of Utah's children have received their childhood immunizations, compared with 73 percent nationally.

Data for the study was gathered from the Center for Disease Control and Prevention.

Utah leads Nation in lowest rates

- Mortality Rate - 45 deaths per 100 thousand
- Heart Disease Rate - 192 deaths per 100 thousand
- Smoking - 12.9 % of Utahans
- Obesity - 49% of Utahans (The national average is 55%)

The announcement came days after Bush addressed the U.N. General Assembly debate and said that Iraq must comply with Security Council resolutions or face a military strike.

Secretary of State Colin Powell has been lobbying the other 14 members of the council to support a resolution that would mandate the return of inspectors and permit the use of force should Iraq refuse.

But there was no mention of the United States in the letter Iraq sent late Monday.

Instead, Iraq said it was responding to an earlier appeal by Annan for Baghdad's compliance with Security Council resolutions calling for unfettered access to inspectors, and to an appeal by the Arab League and other Islamic countries.

Annan forwarded the letter to all 15 members of the council and to the chief weapons inspector, Hans Blix.

It was not clear when the council would meet to consider the letter, a first step before sending inspectors back.

Blix has said he could have inspectors on the ground within days but it would take his teams several months to set-up on the ground before they could begin monitoring Iraqi sites.

ed Nations failed to ide clear, Washington ree to attack Iraq on its own.

As the Bush administration in recent months raised this possibility of a unilateral U.S. attack on Irao, the Saudis ruled out use of their bases for such a campaign.

Some 5,000 U.S. military personnel are stationed in Saudi Arabia, most at the remote Prince Sultan Air Base. In the 1991 Gulf War, Saudi Arabia was the main base for a half-million-strong, U.S.-led military force that drove the Iraqi army from Kuwait. But since then the Saudis have periodically prohibited the use of their soil for strikes against Iraq and, more recently, limited the use of their bases for the U.S. campaign in Afghanistan.

The Saudi foreign minister first commented Sunday in an interview with CNN. Asked whether Saudi bases would be available to Washington, Saud replied that if the Security Council adopts a resolution authorizing force against Iraq, "Everybody is obliged to follow through."

Saud said, however, he remained opposed in principle to the use of military force against Iraq or a unilateral American attack.

Body painting only one point in speech

President Merrill J. Bateman stood before a full crowd a week ago and told students to revere their own bodies and be humble in learning on BYU's campus.

As part of that effort, he suggested that we seek knowledge, both temporal and spiritual, since the more we know about the earth, the more effective we will be in accomplishing the commission given to us.

He urged students to be mindful of their bodies. He urged students to view their bodies as temples where the spirit dwells and not deface it. He gave a specific example of individuals "stripping to the waist and painting their faces and bodies at football games."

He urged that we make sure that there is enjoyment in learning, but that it is kept within limitations.

The example of body painting at the games has drawn deep breaths and open-mouthed gasps from some of the student body who claim to see nothing wrong with showing support at football games and events. The controversy swelled as some sarcastically spoke out saying "we should wear our Sunday best to football games next, or carry our scriptures to the games." Some scoffed at the fact we offer a prayer before the game begins in LaVell Edwards Stadium.

Such backtalk is detrimental and derogatory to the goodwill of the university. It promotes discontent and discord among students.

We urge students to support the university and its teams and other functions on campus. Without the students there would be no activities offered.

President Bateman's comments during Devotional set the tone for what should be learned here. Of the 23,000 students who have chosen to attend this university, most have committed to live the standards. As such, it's not necessary that we be commanded in all things.

This past weekend someone borrowed my car stereo.

I don't remember telling anyone that it would be OK for him or her to borrow it, but I must have just forgotten that I told them they could come by and take it out of my car anytime between 1 a.m. and 3 p.m. this past Thursday.

What I feel worse about is that since it's Provo, I'm sure they assumed I would leave my car doors unlocked for them. They must have needed that stereo right then because they had to smash my passenger window to get to it.

They were obviously in a hurry because they left behind all my CDs that have worked so well with my car stereo.

Or they just realized that all my CDs are burned, because I had to start my CD collection over when someone else "borrowed" my CDs out of the Helaman Halls parking lot my freshman year at BYU.

This has been especially frustrating for me, because for the past 13 years I have lived in the Washington, D.C., metro area. I have parked my car in the city countless times and have managed to escape the city with the second highest crime rate in the nation without ever being victimized. However, in the past three years I've lived in Provo, I have been the victim of a random act of crime twice now.

Sure, insurance is going to replace the stereo and has already replaced my window. I suppose the worst part about this is that it's inconvenient. I had to give up a Saturday to have the window repaired and, at least for a while, there is no music in my car.

The only consolation I get out of the whole situation is that someone, other than myself, is now the proud owner of the most complicated stereo system ever created. I never could figure out how to set my clock and it was always about one hour, seven minutes fast.

I still hadn't mastered setting radio stations to memory, and don't even think about scanning through the radio stations. It's not going to happen. And whoever borrowed the stereo forgot to take along the stereo remote control that was in the glove box.

So, if you happen to be in a car with someone whose clock seems abnormally ahead of time, and you see him or her struggling to find the radio station they want to listen to, you might want to suggest they come back and grab the remote. It's in the glove box with the instruction manual.

This time I'll leave the doors unlocked. After all, I live in Provo.

Costly football

Dear Editor:

My son is a student at BYU and is married with a child on the way in December.

I called him last Friday to see if they were at the game so I could possibly spot them on TV. He said that he and his wife would love to go to the football games, but couldn't afford it. He said that a ticket in the "nosebleed" section for students was $17. I was flabbergasted. I recall my student days at BYU and the great enjoyment I had going to the football games to support my team. My tickets were covered by my tuition fees.

Is my son correct that it would cost a young married couple $34 to attend the game? That is outrageous! What does the administration think these kids are made of — money? I had to take out student loans to go to college, and I'm sure today's students are in the same fix. Has BYU become a school only for the rich?

Toss confetti, not tortilla

Dear Editor,

I am writing to beg the current BYU student community to cease this tortilla-throwing at football games. I have been following BYU football since the stadium was expanded, and only missed one home game during my seven years at BYU and the six years prior to that time.

As I watched the last two BYU games on the Dish, I was absolutely embarrassed by this tortilla throwing.

I read Wendy Weiler's article, and I can't believe BYU would allow two such morons to remain on campus. "John and Joe" may have the best of intentions, but they need a little Prozac. Joe was near tears watching all the tortillas flying around, he is exaggerating of course, but he also thinks that flinging those things is exciting? Joe, get a life. Then a senior named Ryan Jensen feels that the tortillas helped win the game? Ryan, you are a senior now. If you are going to really hold such ridiculous opinions, you should have learned by now to keep them to yourself. "Better to be thought a fool than to open one's mouth and remove all doubt."

Seriously, BYU-fan, this tortilla throwing looks dumb. It makes a lot of the alums feel dumb when we invite friends over to watch a game, and they see this kind of behavior. It is wasteful. It is inconsiderate of others, and frankly it has the potential to be very damaging to an individual and costly to the university. A more useful (for the team itself) and obnoxious way to show support would be to bring in cowbells or some other noise maker. If you feel like you absolutely have to throw something, try confetti.

Tortilla problems?

Dear Editor,

I thoroughly enjoyed Wendy Weiler's article on the latest BYU controversy of throwing tortillas at football games.

Like most controversies at BYU, it focuses on two opposing views of what BYU should be. In this case, should it be a bastion of tortilla abstinence or a shining example of youthful, drug-free, tortilla creativity?

I am currently a graduate student at the University of Maryland. The school administration here is dealing with their own school controversies. These include riots after games, with looting, over $500,000 worth of destruction and countless injuries. And don't forget student drinking, with one fraternity being shut down last year when a freshmen recruit was found dead of alcohol intoxication. Many students remain apathetic about how this reflects on the school, except as it might hurt the value of their degree.

I look forward to the impending tortilla debate, as arguments and counterpoints are flung about like their corn equivalents after a BYU touchdown. Consider Berkeley, as they have a tortilla tossing tradition as well. Maybe we want to be more like Berkeley. Maybe we don't. I don't know. Can tortillas injure? Maybe the engineering department can rig up some tests, and find out which tortilla is really fan friendly. And what about wasting food? Perhaps only expired tortillas should be used. I don't know.

I just enjoy the fact that BYU students care about their school and are willing to go to great lengths to champion the cause. I also greatly appreciate a school where the gospel is taught and respected. Long live BYU!

Midnight runner replies

Dear Editor,

I am a midnight runner. And being such, I wish to respond to the rather erroneous and, need I say it, typically male comments made in last Tuesday's viewpoint, "Thanks Midnight Runner." Dave Johnson asserted that the BYU female runner "throw[s] caution to the wind ... in pursuit of the perfect body." As important — or lamentably obligatory — as the flawless feminine physique seems to be, it is not necessarily the impetus behind our late night sprints on "darkened Tree Streets."

Rather, the evening. jog serves as a metamorphic moment when the overstressed, over-worked, over-idealized LDS woman can transmogrify, becoming a sort of inverse Cinderella — shedding her modest, yet sexy, prim, yet stylish apparel to become the racing belle of University Avenue. It is a moment of supreme triumph when the paradoxical Mormon female can temporarily cast aside the duties of housekeeper, chef, student, saint and bombshell to become the gold medal sprinter of her personal Olympics.

One more misconception to shatter. Running surface streets in Provo is hardly "throwing caution to the wind." In fact, it is often much safer than other exercise options offered to the over-scheduled student. I believe it was "Runner's World" magazine that commented, "play it safe — running on surface streets and other non-isolated areas is the best solution for the late night runner." For the busy BYU female who cannot break her day with a trip to the Gym (which is another chauvinistic entity in itself), running on surface streets is the best available option.

ing the Honor Code pro- a healthy lifestyle," said n referring to married BYU ats. "Plus it is easier to ish healthy habits early on rather than later."

Wilson also found that people tend to marry those similar to themselves, resulting in similar choices regarding their health.

"We've only been married three weeks and right now we don't have our own kitchen, but once we get our own we plan on making lunch and dinner for each other and stop eating out to be more healthy," said Dani Hoagland, 24, a junior from Orem, majoring in psychology.

"We both did sports in high school and like to snow ski and the outdoors," said Hoagland's husband, Dave, 24, a junior from Orem, majoring in physics. "It is nice to spend time together doing those recreational activities."

Wilson's study not only showed that people are inclined to marry those with similar backgrounds and levels of education, but similar values, standards and interests are also factors contributing to health.

"It is important to have someone with similar activity interests exercise wise," said Lisa Ricks, 21, a senior from Lehighton, Pa., majoring in English education.

"Your spouse is your best friend; they have to motivate you. If they want to stay home and watch a movie you are going to," Ricks said. "My husband and I go rock climbing a couple days a week and backpack every other weekend; it's something we enjoy doing together."

Since marital stress can cause declining health and more research is surfacing about how marriage impacts individual's health, Wilson offers his opinion that one way couples can improve their health is to strengthen their marriage.

"Stresses, such as problems with work, kids and any uncertainty in life, can have a significant impact, but if you have a strong marriage and family it is easier to cope with difficult times and allows people to deal better with stress in life," Wilson said.

BYU professor develops virtual chemistry lab

By Nathaniel Wadsworth

NewsNet Staff Writer

Playing with mercury is a dangerous business, but now chemistry students at Brigham Young University can do it all they want.

This is thanks to a new virtual chemistry lab created by BYU professor of chemistry Brian F. Woodfield.

As a graduate student at the University of California—Berkeley, Woodfield had the idea of creating a computer simulation of a chemistry lab. Woodfield was not able to pursue his idea until after he became a professor at BYU in 1997.

The first phase of the project, called Virtual ChemLab, was completed in 1999. It is already being used in classes at BYU.

According to Woodfield, there has been a 30 percent increase in student performance in organic chemistry labs because of the virtual lab.

The virtual lab allows students to set up lab conditions, combine chemicals and view the results of experiments.

"Our focus is to provide students an open-ended environment where they are forced to think," Woodfield said. He explained that because of time, cost and safety reasons students often do not learn as much as they could in real lab conditions.

Tricia Andersen, a 2001 graduate of BYU and a research assistant on the project, said the virtual lab is convenient because it gives students the ability to get the same results as they would in a real lab, but often in a fraction of the time. She demonstrated how the time in the virtual lab can be advanced, so an experiment requiring two hours can be done in one minute, with the same results.

"A lot of students got a lot out of it," said Drew Barlow, 22, a junior from Alpine, Utah County, majoring in chemical engineering. Barlow used the virtual lab in his Chemistry 353 class.

Barlow said the virtual lab was easy to use and most students didn't have any trouble with it, but he preferred the actual lab to the simulated one.

According to the project Web page, chemlab.byu.edu, there are currently more than 5,000 students at BYU enrolled in general chemistry courses and an estimated 250,000 students nationwide enrolled in post-secondary chemical courses per year.

Virtual ChemLab, which has been available to the public for less than a year, is already being used in several universities in the United States and Canada but, Woodfield said, many people still do not know about it.

Woodfield said ChemLab has not yet been taken to high schools, but that is definitely in the project's future.

"Henry inspired me to help him and others," Kotter said.

To date, the organization has raised about $28,000 and other donations to pay for tuition, books and room and board.

"Henry will be the first one we will help, but I hope that many will follow," Kotter said.

The organization differs from The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints' Perpetual Education Fund in that the PEF grants student loans for the student to be educated in their own country.

"It is expected that they will attend school in their own communities. Initially, most of these students will attend technical schools," said President Hinckley in his conference talk about the PEF in April of 2001.

Kotter feels there is also a need to help bring students to the United States.

"We live in a land where prosperity and opportunity abound. There are those among us in America who are economically disadvantaged, but they still have more opportunity than the vast majority of people on this Earth," he said.

The help from Kotter's charity has overwhelmed Mwesigwa.

"I am grateful for friends like Joshua who are so generous in everything to see that life can become better for the people like myself from undeveloped countries," Mwesigwa said.

"What Joshua is doing, I believe, is so inspired and to me it has brought back hope in my life which I had lost a long time back after filling an LDS mission to England," he said.

More Hispanics go to college, fewer stay

By Michael Castellon
University Daily (Texas Tech U.)

A study shows that while 42 percent of Hispanic grads attend college only 16 percent receive degrees by age 29.

LUBBOCK, Texas — Second-generation Hispanics are attending college almost as much as whites, but are less than half as likely to earn bachelor's degrees, according to a report issued by the Pew Hispanic Center, a Washington, D.C.-based nonpartisan research group.

The report, which uses data collected by the 1997-2000 U.S. Census Bureau's Current Population Survey, found that about 42 percent of second-generation Hispanic high school students ages 18-24 attended college, compared to 46 percent of whites.

According to the report, however, 16 percent of Hispanic high school graduates ages 25-29 have received bachelor's degrees, compared to 37 percent of white students.

"I think that you can see that a very large number of Latinos are enrolled in higher education," said Roberto Suro, director of the Pew Hispanic Center. "The bad news is that they're not graduating at the same rate."

Vice president for Enrollment Management Michael Heintze said retention rates for Hispanic students at Texas Tech University are currently 72 percent, compared to 82 percent of white students, 77 percent of African-American students, 92 percent of Asian students and 88 percent of Native American students.

Promoting retention rates of Hispanic students at Tech is an objective of the organization, Janie Ramirez, program coordinator for Raiders Rojos, said.

"If we don't have a support system in place, it's just a revolving door," she said. "We have to play the listener, the friend and the mentor."

Ramirez said one method the organization uses to improve retention rates of Hispanic students at Tech is to help create a family support network for Hispanic students.

"In some families, collegiate experience is minimal if it exists at all," she said. "We're helping families understand that the demands of college are so much different than those of high school. If the family is involved, chances of success are higher."

Hispanic Student Society President Miguel Lopez said Tech officials could do more to address retention rates of Hispanic students.

"They are doing a lot, but I think there is a lot more that they could do," he said.

Other major universities in Texas, like the University of Texas and Texas A&M University, put more into promoting diversity, Lopez said.

"If diversity becomes the No. 1 issue, it's going to benefit all students," Lopez said.

Ramirez agrees. She said while the administration talks about diversity, they could do more to enforce it.

"The administration is very supportive of our organization because they see us as a solution," Ramirez said. "I hear it in every speech, but you just wish you saw more action."

Suro said the report found Hispanic students are extending their education past the traditional ages of 18-24.

"Statistics show that people taking courses late into their 20s are less likely to end up with a degree," Suro said. "The American economy warrants people with credentials."

Some solutions to the problem of higher dropout rates for Hispanic students include improved connections between two- and four-year institutions and work-study programs, he said.

"A great many Latino students work," Suro said. "Work-study programs have potential, as does improving the connection between two- and four-year colleges and universities so students have a better opportunity to move on to a four-year degree."

Amber Lees, a freshman pre-med student from Plainview, Texas, said the numbers in the report may be the result of a lack of degree-earning role models.

"There aren't many state or national leaders (Hispanics) see to give them an incentive," Lees said. "If you ask someone to name a Hispanic role model, they would probably have a hard time naming just one."

The report said 75 percent of Hispanic college students between 18-24 were enrolled full time, compared to 85 percent of whites.

Hispanic students are also less likely to pursue graduate degrees, the report said. About 1.9 percent of Hispanics are enrolled in graduate school compared to 3.8 percent of whites.

Study shows caffein can impede natural cellular processes

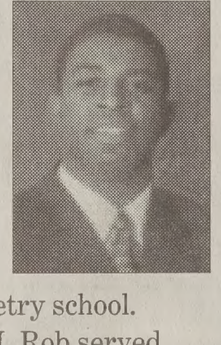
Presented by the Department of Dance
Welcome by Student Body President Robert Foster



Prior to serving as president of the BYU student body, Rob was vice president of the University Student Council for BYUSA. He is majoring in psychology and plans to attend optometry school. Before coming to BYU, Rob served a mission in East Los Angeles and attended Ricks College (BYU—Idaho), where he played basketball and was awarded the 2000 Ricks College Man of the Year Award. Rob is married to Carleen Davis of Riverton, Utah, and they are expecting their first child soon.

For more than 30 years, students from BYU have shared the light of the gospel with people worldwide through the medium of dance. Dancing into the hearts of people everywhere, they continue to open doors of understanding and friendship, while assisting members to bring the Church out of obscurity in distant lands and throughout North America. BYU's College of Health and Human Performance is home to the largest dance department in the United States. Their productions are viewed by millions annually. This past February they were featured throughout the 2002 Salt Lake City Winter Olympics and Winter Paralympic Games.

Some students report pajamas are comfortable, while others feel staying in sleepwear saves time.

"I feel way more comfortable in pajamas," said Britney Hellwig, a junior from Springfield, Ohio, majoring in recreation management. "It's just more relaxed, almost like you are still in bed."

Hellwig said she feels wearing pajamas helps her because she is not putting up a front for anyone and it saves time when she is in a rush.

However, not all students are into the "still in bed" feel at school.

"I feel nicer and better prepared when I do not wear my pajamas," said Mark Christensen, a sophomore from Sandy, majoring in computer animation. "It comes across as if you are not prepared when you don't dress nicely."

Dressing up may also help self-confidence.

"I always feel better about myself if I am dressed nice," said Janae Van Tassell, a sophomore from Tabiona, Duchesne, majoring in fitness and wellness management.

Lindsay Korth, freshman from Berthoud, Colo., majoring in general studies, said she does not believe the general public takes anyone in pajamas seriously.

"I want my professors to take me as a serious student," Korth said. "I take pride in what I do."

Amy Peterson, a senior from Washington, D.C, majoring in English, said she feels people wear pajamas in two cases — if they are a freshman or trying to make a statement.

"I wore my pajamas to class a few times as a freshman," Peterson said. "Pajamas are really just making a statement. You are trying to tell everyone 'I am stressed, I am tired.' At BYU anything that does not look like an Old Navy ad stands out."

"It is ridiculous," said Mike Jaklin, a senior in broadcast journalism. "It shows disrespect to everyone else in class."

Not all see this as a problem, though. Daniel K. Muhlestien, an assistant professor of later British literature said he has never had a student in class in pajamas.

Clayson started "The Early Show" with Gumbel in 1999, after CBS spent $30 million to build a new studio near New York's Central Park. It never seriously challenged NBC's "Today" show or ABC's "Good Morning America" in the ratings.

"It's a tough road," Clayson said. "For the first time in the network's history of failure in the morning for 40 years, the broadcast that Bryant and I launched ... made a lot of money for CBS."

Clayson's most memorable moment came this summer, a tense interview with contributor Martha Stewart on the domestic diva's financial scandal. Stewart hasn't appeared on "The Early Show" since.

"It has been a challenging few months, to try to juggle a lot of different people and personalities and strengths and weaknesses," she said. "But I felt like it was my broadcast after Bryant left and I was proud of the effort and time that went into it."

Japanese woman is 115

Associated Press

TOKYO — Kamato Hongo, the world's oldest person according to the Guinness Book of Records, turned 115 on Monday.

Hongo slept through the morning of her birthday but planned to celebrate with her family in the afternoon, Japanese media reported.

She lives with her 78-year-old daughter on the southern island of Kyushu, which has a reputation for record-breaking longevity among its residents.

Born Sept. 16, 1887, Hongo was raised on a farm and counts Japanese sake among her favorite things, along with black salt, pork, sashimi, and green tea, according to Guinness. She also likes traditional Japanese dancing.

Hongo requires constant care and is slightly hard of hearing. She has been confined to a bed and wheelchair since she injured her hip in 1998, according to a Japanese nursing care and welfare Web site.

Women's golf tees off at Shanico

By Jennifer Winn
jenniferw@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

As the new season gets under way for the women's golf team, head coach Sue Nyhus is carefully planning, not only for this season, but also for the years to come.

"The goals I have for this season are probably more long range than for just this year," Nyhus said.

"The team is really young," she said. "There are a lot of girls who are just starting to crack their potential."

Only four of BYU's players from last year's team are returning this season.

Junior Nicole Newren said she is excited about the upcoming season.

"We have lost a lot of key players this year," Newren said, "But we have gained some awesome freshman who have amazing talent."

Newren said the team is strong and she expects their performance at the Shanico Invitational to be just as strong.

The Shanico Invitational in Oregon began Monday at 8:30 a.m. It marked BYU's first tournament of the 2002-03 season.

Eighteen teams are participating in this year's Shanico Invitational.

The first 36 holes were played Monday, and the final 18 holes will be played today.

Last year at the Shanico Invitational, BYU placed sixth out of 19 teams.

This season marks Nyhus' second year as head coach for the women's golf team. Before being head coach, Nyhus was the team's assistant coach for three years.

In the years to come, Nyhus said she wants the team to move to a national ranking in the top 20s.

BYU is currently ranked at 69 nationally.

President Merrill J. Bateman really encourages all the athletic teams to move their rankings up to the top 20s, Nyhus said.

"With the talent that we have in this young group, we'd sure like to really make an effort to move in that direction," Nyhus said. "Now is the perfect time to do that with all the young girls on the team."

Nyhus emphasized that a goal of this enormity might not happen this year because of how young the team is.

"But with time, this is the core of where we're going. We're going to get our top 20 ranking," she said.

Nyhus said it is too early to determine who the stars of the team are going to be this year.

"I can't even tell you who is going to start this season. It's that tight amongst the players." Nyhus said. "It's a well-balanced team."

"These are great girls," Nyhus said about the team. "They're just a joy to work with."

After the Shanico Invitational, the women's golf team has slightly longer than a week to practice and focus in on mistakes before their next meet.

The team won't compete again until Sept. 26 and 27, when they travel to New Mexico for the Dick McGuire Invitational.

IceCats use mes to pay for event

By Jeremy Twitchell

NewsNet Sports Writer

While most collegiate sports teams are capable of generating enough money to support themselves, there are other teams that must roll up their sleeves and head to the trenches in order to raise the funds necessary to pursue their sport.

Or in the case of the Provo IceCats, they head to the stands.

After every event at LaVell Edwards Stadium, the team gathers in the looming shadow of the west stands and begins to clean.

Depending on how raucous the event was, and how many people players can find to lend a hand, cleanup can take hours.

After the Stadium of Fire on July 4, for example, the team was there working for five hours cleaning up the stands. The average amount of time after a home football game is three to four hours.

Although most students would complain about having to perform such a task in order to play their sport, the members of the IceCats team appreciate the opportunity.

"It's an opportunity to be able to play, and that's our main focus," said senior forward Miguel Lopez. "It allows us to play the game we love, and to provide some service," which he said is a nice addition. "But the main thing is that it lets us play."

Brian Wages, the team's public and media relations manag mates the fund-raiser pro much as one-third of the total budget. Because the not sponsored by BYU, it no funding from the schoo

The money raised thro fund-raiser is used mai travel to away games, wh be expensive this year schedule includes tr Washington state and S California. The rest of th budget comes from player pation fees and a fe donors.

Amy Fager, the IceCats' manager, said the players stand they are cleaning and that helps them to good attitude about it.

"They're pretty willing because they realize it allows them to travel to Fager said. "They kno they're working for."

This year the team biggest assignment at th um, which is the west stan as Lopez explains, the big is also the most beneficia team.

"Big projects at the be always look daunting, but when you're with your Lopez said. "It builds cam and team unity, and whe people are there with yo lot easier."

BYU track coach prepares collegians and Olympians

nyAnn Rupp

Craige Poole
Women's Track Coach

J women's head track , Dr. Craige Poole was to go to Greece two months chairman of USA women's and field gave Poole a call at d of June.

sked her in what capacity; I even thinking," Poole said. said, well, think, 2004 pic Games staff."

u're kidding me," Poole "I about dropped the phone ll over backwards."

e was selected by the 16- er USA Track and Field national Staff Selection mittee under the direction of rduphrey, who will be the n's 2004 head coach.

committee asked Poole to assistant coach over the ng and multi events, includ- gh jump, triple jump, pole and heptathlon.

hink it is really an honor," said. "It is one of those s in a coach's lifetime where ay this is the pinnacle of oaching career."

is is what you hope for, dreaming it would come to ."

For Poole it has come to reality. His duties start immediately.

Unlike volleyball or basketball coaches, track coaches do not have to put a team together or place people in positions.

Instead track coaches are more facilitators involved in organizing the events.

"In track and field, athletes nationwide have their own coaches that will remain intimately involved with them through the whole Olympic experience," Poole said.

"Olympic staff become overseer, they facilitate for personal coaches who are trying to do all they can for athletes at the Olympic games," he said

Although Poole as an assistant coach will not be personally coaching all Olympic athletes, he does expect BYU strength coach, Tiffany Lott, to make the Olympic team. If she does, he will be her personal Olympic coach.

Many experiences during Poole's 22 years coaching at BYU have helped prepare him for this Olympic experience.

For the past six years, Poole has served as the pre-eminent expert on heptathlons and heptathletes in the United States as development coordinator for USA track and field.

At the international level, Poole was the head women's coach for the United States at the World University Games last year in Beijing, China.

Athletes competing in the world games are the top university athletes.

"I think that I have been lucky," Poole said. "Every experience just builds up and you learn more and more to help you be where you are right now. It is really a growing experience."

Through all this experience Poole has developed a unique coaching style.

He focuses on the positive, never discounting his athletes, but thrives in finding their strengths and building upon those.

"How would you like to be treated?" Poole asks. "Shouldn't one coach that way?"

"With athletes, you can tell them what it is you are doing, and that we are in this job together, and then work the details out."

"What we want to do is make this working relationship in such a way that we move forward with no glitches or back steps at all," he said.

Poole has great relationships with all of his athletes. They consider him a father figure not only on the track but also off the track.

"He is kind of my Dad away from home, he has a genuine interest in everyone," sophomore high jumper Candace Clifford said.

His athletes have great faith in their coach and talents.

"There wouldn't be a better job for coach than on the Olympic staff," said sophomore sprinter Jamie Coughlin.

Poole said his job as a coach is to be a confidant and a counselor with the athletes to help them balance their life and keep going on a straight path.

"He is willing to teach you the lesson behind what he is having you do," sophomore hurdler Collette Grosnickle said.

> "I think I have been lucky. Every experience just builds up and you learn more to help you be where you are now."
> — Craig Poole, BYU Women's track coach

In his 23 seasons at BYU, Poole has built a program that has a near perfect record. Poole has produced over 45 All-Americans, since coming to BYU in 1980.

Poole's teams have won every outdoor conference title since 1982 and all but one indoor title in the past 12 years.

"It is all about selecting good people — good assistants and athletes," Poole said.

"The people we get here have good talents; they understand the game and buy into the plan. They work hard, are dedicated. As a result we have been able to deliver them a package that helps them to be successful," he said.

Poole's coaching roots come from his growing up experiences playing sandlot baseball and from his father, also a coach.

"I just loved our neighborhood competition. I thrived on it," Poole said. "I liked what my Dad did. I liked his relationship with people. It was something that rang true."

His father did not want him to be a coach. But after graduating from Utah State he became the track coach at Churchill Junior High School in Salt Lake City.

Poole has an undergraduate and two advanced degrees in physical education.

After years of experience, Poole is ready for Greece as an ambassador for the United States and BYU.

"I think that I can bring a spirit of cooperation and willingness to work hard while working with the staff and athletes on the Olympic team," Poole said.

"Only as a supportive and synergistic effort are we going to be able to be successful in 2004."

Stamp highlights plight of unwanted litters, pets

By Chris Stevens
chris@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Andy von Harten/Daily Universe

This is one of the many pets the Humane Society is trying to save. A new stamp brings attention to the plight of such animals.

Thousands of cats and dogs die annually in Utah shelters because the animals are not wanted. United States Postal Service and other organizations have aligned in a common cause to put a stop to the needless deaths and homelessness of cats and dogs in Utah.

Starting Sept. 20, USPS will feature two different 37-cent stamps, one with a puppy and the other a kitten, in a campaign "Stamp Out Homelessness for Dogs and Cats."

Sixty-four million stamps have been printed in USPS's annual social awareness campaign. It is the first time since 1984 an animal has been featured on a stamp, said Erin Fell, communications director for No More Homeless Pets in Utah.

The postal service chose the issue of sterilization because of the serious crisis in America of too many healthy cats and dogs being put to sleep, Fell said.

"There's only one way to eliminate the overpopulation, and that is by having your pets spade or neutered," said Pauline Edwards, clinic director for The Humane Society of Utah. "Too many die in shelters for reasons that could have been prevented. The problem is not under control until every adoptable animal has a home and is not euthanized because it is not wanted."

The overpopulation stems from dogs or cats having an unwanted, unexpected litter. It is estimated that one unaltered female cat and her offspring can produce 420,000 cats in just seven years, Fell said.

"Since people don't see wild cats and dogs wandering in the streets like they do in other countries, they don't think it's a problem here in Utah," Fell said. "It is a hidden problem because people can't see the thousands of animals that are put down."

The majority of the animals brought into the shelters come from litters. The Humane Society of Utah took in 8,000 animals and 85 percent were adopted. The 15 percent, or 1,200 animals, that didn't find homes were euthanized, Edwards said.

"The stamp is helping to draw attention to the crisis of animal overpopulation in the world," Fell said. "This is a great way we can educate millions of Americans about the dog and cat overpopulation crisis."

The stamp will be unveiled on Saturday by No More Homeless Pets in Utah at the Super Adoption in Salt Lake. The stamp and other awareness campaigns will help No More Homeless Pets in Utah to eliminate the deaths of healthy, adoptable dogs and cats in Utah shelters by 2005, Fell said.

"I believe the goal is achievable if we can get the message out to the public that there is a crisis, and that pet owners are contributing to the euthanasia of animals in Utah if their animals are not spayed or neutered," Fell said.

Hormones control the lives of animals. Male cats and dogs that are not fixed have a desire to roam in search of females. After an animal is fixed, it is content with staying at home and is less of an annoyance around the house. Also, a license for a fixed animal is less expensive, Edwards added.

Nine veterinarians have donated their services at a discounted rate to Utah County Super Fix Sept. 16-28. Pet owners can call 1-866-PETS FIX to hear the list of participating veterinarians in their area. A cat neuter costs $15, cat spay $25, dog neuter $30, dog spay $40. They can be as young as four months old, but no dogs or cats over five years, Fell said.

Utah celebrates recovery, healing of drug addicts

By Julie Cunningham

September is National Alcohol and Drug Addiction Recovery Month and communities nationwide are doing their part to support this national campaign.

Recovery Day: Celebrating Freedom from Chemical Dependency will be Sept. 28 from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Gallivan Center in Salt Lake.

Recovery Day will focus on helping people recognize alcohol and substance abuse as a treatable disease and can be overcome with the proper help, said Jeff Zentner, public relations coordinator for Recovery Day.

"We are trying to reduce the stigma," Zentner said.

"Help is out there, it is available to everyone, it works, and it is necessary."

There will be a gold medal walk, prizes, live music, free refreshments and information booths about treatment facilities at the event.

Guest speakers, including Salt Lake City Mayor Rocky Anderson and City Council member Randy Horiuchi, will also be part of the entertainment.

There are many substance abuse treatment facilities in the area where people can receive help to overcome their addictions, Zentner said.

"There are residential programs where people go to live for a matter of weeks or months," he explained. "There are outpatient facilities where people go in for a few hours a week and receive counseling, and there are lots of types in between. Salt Lake County offers the full range of treatment services that are available."

There are also treatment facilities in Utah County like The Gathering Place in Orem.

"We have all different kinds of programs," said Jackie Mauga, receptionist at The Gathering Place.

"There are programs to help mothers who are on drugs, young teen-age girls who are pregnant, family support groups, children therapy — we basically have programs to help all adults, adolescents and children."

In support of National Recovery Month, The Gathering Place is focusing on letting people know about the warning signs of substance abuse, as well as that help is available, said Summer McCann, public relations for The Gathering Place.

"At The Gathering Place, we believe that recovery is always possible," she said.

"We are trying to focus on education and letting people know there is always help available no matter how overwhelming their addictions may seem."

Recovery Day will also emphasize the importance of support groups in the success of full recovery from substance abuse, Zentner said.

"The most important thing to understand is substance abuse is a disease, and it is very difficult to conquer by yourself," he said. "If you have a support group network you are more likely to overcome it."

Recovery Day is targeted toward people who have been through recovery, but people who have never been through substance abuse and want to celebrate the freedom that comes from not being chemically dependent can attend, Zentner said.

"We are trying to make people understand that being addicted to drugs or alcohol does not make you a bad person or a morally weak person," he added. "You shouldn't feel stigmatized to seek help."

Turnout high in Kashmir elections despite violent threats

NEW DELHI, India — Voter turnout was surprisingly high in the first round of elections in Indian-controlled Kashmir on Monday, with officials saying 44 percent of the voters defied militant threats of violence and cast ballots.

Hundreds of thousands of police and security forces were deployed, but violence was limited. A rocket was fired at a polling station in the town of Seri Khwaja, killing a 16-year-old boy, and grenades went off in the village of Shalal, wounding two people.

Police blamed Islamic guerrillas fighting Indian rule in the Himalayan territory for the rocket attack.

Kashmiri separatists have called a boycott of the legislative elections, saying they are illegitimate and have been rigged in the past. Militant groups have threatened to kill anyone participating in the vote.

The election commission announced that turnout for the day — the first of four phases of voting — was 44 percent, with about 1.5 million voters in 23 constituencies casting their vote, the election commission said.

India's Deputy Election Commissioner Sayan Chatterjee said the government was "satisfied" with the turnout. Officials had said before the vote that they expected around 35 percent turnout.

Kashmir's main separatist alliance claimed many voters were forced to polling stations.

Pleasant Grove interchange gets ribbon-cutting ceremony

The morning was sunny for the ribbon-cutting ceremony that commemorated the opening of the new freeway interchange at I-15 in Pleasant Grove on Monday.

A construction project that began in December 2000, the interchange is now open for traffic.

The ribbon-cutting ceremony "celebrates working together with the community," said Geoff Dupaix, spokesperson for the Utah Department of Transportation.

The interchange will reduce some of the traffic back-ups that have hampered on and off ramps at 500 East in American Fork and at 1600 North in Orem, according to a UDOT news release issued earlier this month.

It may seem like a long time from start to finish, but Dupaix said a standard contract such as the one for the new interchange allows two years for completion of the project. Dupaix said much of the work goes on away from the view of freeway traffic.

Providing for things like drainage and settling of soil and materials takes time and may lead drivers to assume nothing is happening because they do not see hardhats and bulldozers moving about.

Pleasant Grove City is working on a multi-phase project to build connector roads from the interchange into the city, the first phase of which was completed in August. Pleasant Grove Boulevard will carry traffic from the interchange into town. The improvements should improve access to Pleasant Grove and surrounding cities from I-15.

State and local dignitaries attended Monday morning's ceremony, including Sen. John Valentine, the mayors of Pleasant Grove and Lindon and UDOT executives.

The only work yet to be done on the interchange is landscaping, which will look similar to the University Parkway interchange.
